

Kurt Wells

Kurt Wells is a fourth generation Coloradoan and has had a life-long passion for baseball. He is on the Board of Directors of the Society for American Baseball Research's (SABR) Rocky Mountain chapter. In the late 1980's, he co-hosted a Denver radio sports talk show, promoting bringing major league baseball to Denver. Kurt was subsequently appointed as a loaned executive to the Colorado Baseball Commission to support the efforts in the award of the Colorado Rockies franchise. Mr. Wells hosted 14 Colorado Rockies players staying in his home from 2001 to 2013, including Matt Holliday, Clint Barmes and Charlie Blackmon. Kurt received his bachelor's degree in business administration from the University of Northern Colorado and an MBA in Finance and Accounting from Regis University. He has recently retired from a long career in corporate finance. He also loves spending time with his wife, three children, and two grandchildren. Kurt also enjoys performing live solo shows, playing guitar and singing.

John Salvino

John Salvino is President of the Rocky Mountain chapter of the Society for American Baseball Research (SABR)

John Salvino is a lifelong baseball fan who enjoys the connections that are made because of the game as much as the game itself. He finds beauty in the game because of how it allows people to connect with it, and with each other, in so many different ways. His earliest memories include piling into the family station wagon and taking road trips from southern California to watch his uncle's college games in, what seemed to be, very far away locations. The love of the game, as well as the love of the road, have never left him as he and his two teen aged sons have traveled to 45 states together, stopping at many baseball stadiums and other related sites along the way. John works professionally for a non profit health plan, focused on finding accessible, equitable and affordable care for Coloradans.
